JEWISH NATIONALISM NOT THE ISSUE IN THE MONTREAL ELECTIONS

The claim is still being made in some sections of the Jewish press and in many intelligent circles of Jewish observers that the recent election campaign in St. Louis division, Montreal, had more than a mere passing, local, or political significance. The ghost of the Jewish issue which was dressed up in the white raiment of Jewish idealism and trotted around during the campaign refuses to disappear on the "morning after." The supporters of the defeated candidate had apparently so intoxicated themselves with the fumes of their "nationalistic" twaddle that they still continue to prattle about the profound Jewish issues and ideals that were at stake. And their persistence in speaking in their lofty propagandist pitch which they assumed during the campaign, and which they should have discarded in their sober, post-election moments is apt to gain credence for their claims among circles unfamiliar with the special circumstances of the case

Jewish public life is sufficiently laden with problems as it is. It is unnecessary to magnify family squabbles among politicians to the proportions of national problems, and to transfigure petty, selfish ambitions into the glories of national aspirations. The tendency to exaggerate the importance of commonplace events, and to bloat newspaper items into chapters of world-history is only too evident in our Jewish world. The effect of this is to add to the confusion which prevails among us, and to postpone the crystallization of a sane standard of values.

It was a strange spectacle to see such an acute observer as the columnist of our Montreal contemporary suddenly break the leash of restraint, and convert his sparkling column into a labourious tirade against those who refused to be taken in by the buncomb of the so-called nationalist candidate. Usually so deft in lancing the putrid pockets of pretension on our communal body, and so agile in tripping up bombasticity, he suddenly changed his whole demeanor and started preaching wisdom like a veritable president of a Jewish Congress. Discoursing in the idealistic implications of the campaign, he nevertheless read an apologia for the introduction into it of the unsavory political realities. There only lacked an explanation as to why this realist in politics, who nevertheless visioned an ideal in the campaign, so forgot the realities of campaigning that he kept away from the campaign and refused to commit himself publicly in favour of his idealistic standard-bearer. Elections are not won by post-election retroactive endorsation.

For our part, our object in recurring to the subject of the campaign is to make it clear once again that we think that the Jewish public should resent the disingenuous attempts of politicians to hitch the principles and ideals of Jewish nationalism to pull their political chestnuts.

In our first editorial on this subject, we deliberately spoke in generalities, aiming merely to expose the exploitation of the ideals of Jewish nationalism, without unduly interfering in the campaign. We did not care which side would win, knowing that there were real issues involved. We did care that ideals which were dear to

THE MENTORS' CLUB

BY RABBI FERDINAND M. ISSERMAN

The Mentors' Club is an organization of young men and women in Toronto, who are the leaders of the Boys' and Girls' Clubs. They are volunteer workers and have organized groups of underprivileged boys and girls for recreation and character building. To these young men and women the community owes a debt of gratitude. They are building finer and better Jewish citizens. We feel that the real badge of aristocracy is service. Such a badge every member of the Mentors' Club is entitled to wear.

TRANS-ATLANTIC FLYING

That the thrill of adventure has not been smothered in our age of brass was evinced by the spontaneous and universal applause which hailed the spanning of the Atlantic by intrepid aviators. The New York "Times" reported that the interest in both trans-Atlantic flights was so great that twelve extra telephone operators, working all night, were required to handle the thousands of inquiries about the progress of the fliers. Other newspapers reported similar interest on the part of their readers. Millions of people breathed sighs of relief when the announcements were made that these explorers of the air had landed on the continent of Europe.

What these flights have done for aviation is incalculable. Rumours about companies organized to establish trans-Atlantic passenger air service are rife. The American continent has suddenly become aware of how backward it has been in the development of air transportation. In Europe regular air-services between the large cities have been established for years, and travelling by aeroplane is no longer a novelty. We know of no regular passenger air-service on the continent. But this deficiency will, under the impulse given to aviation by Lindberg and Chamberlain, be remedied. Why should it not be possible to fly from Toronto to Montreal, New York or Chicago?

No sooner had the news of Lindberg's landing at Paris been flashed to the world than the war heads of nations began to conjure up a new military menace. They saw the possibility of explosives being sent over the Atlantic from Europe to America and vice versa. They feared that this new achievement of man might make for greater destruction.

Our thoughts were exactly at the other pole. We rejoiced that men were brought closer to one another. We believe that the international good-will which Lindbergh's modesty and heroism generated was but the harbinger of the more intense international friendships which closer contacts will make possible. How tiny the world is getting to be! It is shrinking before our gaze. New York and Paris are but thirty-three hours apart. Most of the ill-will and prejudice in the world is due to ignorance. Bringing peoples into more frequent association tends to break down barriers of suspicion and misunderstanding. The new proximity of peoples demonstrated by Lindbergh and Chamberlain will make for peace, as it will help man to see the beauty of cultures other than his own.

Last year the Zeta Beta Tau, America's swellest Jewish fraternity, presented the Richard Gottheil medal to Rabbi Stephen S. Wise; this year to David A. Brown. The medal goes each year to the American, Jew or Gentile, who has rendered the most constructive service to American Jewish life in the opinion of the committee of eleven. Last year the committee voted for Coolidge, Hughes, Lewis Brown and Dr. Herring of the Goodwill movement. This year it voted for Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, also a Goodwill champion and a leader in the non-Jewish movement for European Jewish relief. The committee also voted for Chief Justice Benjamin Cardozo, of the New York State Court of Appeals, and for Nathan Straus and Felix Warburg. Finally it selected the world's most tireless schnorrer, David A. Brown. Who will be next? This question should be worrying the fraternity committee already, for the sad truth is that folks who are known to be rendering the most constructive service to American Jewish life are scarce as hen's teeth. The constructive service for which the Richard Gottheil medal is a reward must be conspicuous service, evidently. For this sort of service Rabbi Wise is the perennial candidate. But how about the many earnest, zealous, comparatively unknown workers toiling daily, ceaselessly, constructively for American Jewish life, filling those most important places, the quiet niches that really make up the whole pattern? The ZBT fraternity could claim greater originality and distinction by finding one of these each year.

Speaking of Rabbi Wise, what he said recently about Jewish fraternities was not the least of the public services he has rendered American Jewry. He attacked them without mercy. He said they were worse than awful and gave good reasons for thinking so. Jewish fraternities exist because Jews are excluded from the Gentile fraternities. When Jews do get into non-Jewish Greek letter fraternities, other than the scholarship ones, they sneak in by withholding their racial identity and the same applies to their membership in university clubs. Dr. Wise found that at Yale and Princeton the list of recent entrants to Greek letter fraternities and clubs did not show a single Jewish name. So he concludes that Jews get in under false colours, purposely select any except Jewish names, or are entirely excluded. He finds the Jewish fraternities "exactly like the others only more so." In many cases they exclude Jews whose parents and grandparents were not born in the United States or may be of Russian Jewish or Polish Jewish origin! Rabbi Wise has often spoken out against such collegians as the members of these fraternities must be. About the most many of them ever accomplish in four years is to look like the current dance floor model. They loaf, are snobbish over nothing except money they couldn't earn and finally emerge by some miracle with a sheepskin, which is all the education they have. Members of a persecuted race, discriminated against to-day in several of the largest universities, their arrogance makes them ludicrous. One of the best services Rabbi Wise can accomplish in American Jewry is to declaim on the subject before the parents so often that they will go on strike, keep the boys home and put them to work.

It was decided to widen missionary work among the Jews at the second Protestant World Missionary Congress called last month at the initiative of Dr. John R. Mott, general secretary of the International Young Men's Christian Association. This action was taken in spite of an urgent appeal received by the Congress at Budapest from the Goodwill committee of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. In a cable to Dr. Mott, the chairman, this committee asked the Congress "to issue a call to Christians to purge the world of the curse of anti-Semitism." The Goodwill committee is in close touch with rabbis all over the country. It agrees with them that it is up to the Christian ministers to take the first step toward removing prejudice against the Jews: These ministers must stop preaching, especially to children and adolescents, that the Jews crucified Christ and that the Jews must continue to suffer for the crucifixion until they change their religion. The ministers must stop missionizing among the Jews. The Protestant World Missionary Congress certainly knows that it only infuriates the Jews to try to missionize among them. The missionary business implies disgusting patronage, majority pressure and an intolerable disrespect for a brother's faith, as the Goodwill committee understands. Therefore missions to the Jews can never be productive of anything but bad feeling. The fact that the Congress acted in opposition to the plea of the Goodwill committee shows that it would rather be intolerant and bigoted than anything else. It will have to be converted to Christianity by the Goodwill committee before it ever relinquishes its fanatical enterprise.

Social Life in 1903— Do You Remember?—

Mr. and Mrs. Silverstone and Miss Silverstone, of St. Louis, Mo., were guests of Mr. and Mrs. H. Gittleson, Drolet Street, Montreal. The Misses Fickler, of Quebec, were visiting their sister, Mrs. J. Dinovitzer, at Chicoutimi. L. Holstein was in Quebec. In the Horticultural Society's annual garden competition I. Rubenstein, 461 St. Urbain Street, won first prize for the best city garden. Rabbi Z. Rosenfeld, of St. Louis, Mo., visited his daughter, Mrs. J. Rosen, 142 St. Lawrence Street, en route from a convention of rabbis at Philadelphia. Mrs. M. Marcus entertained friends of her daughter, Hortense, on the latter's eighth birthday. Mr. and Mrs. M. Tannenbaum returned from the Catskill Mountains. A. Kotzen, of New York, visited L. Sapery, Dumocher Street. The bar-mitzvah of Lyon Levinson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Levinson, Ontario Street, was celebrated at Shaar Hashomayim Synagogue. The wedding took place in Ottawa of Lillian Bilsky, daughter of M. Bilsky, to Archibald J. Freiman. The ceremony was performed under a canopy of white roses by Rev. Herman Abramowitz, of Montreal, assisted by Rabbi J. Mirsky. The bride wore white crepe de Chine with real lace trimmings, a picture hat, a diamond pendant, a gift of the groom, and she carried white roses. The bridesmaids were: Misses Sara Jacobs, of Montreal, in a gown of Dresden silk; Gertrude Bilsky, sister of the bride, in white crepe de Chine over yellow taffeta; and Ray Freiman, of Montreal, sister of the groom, in white silk voile. They carried shower bouquets of white roses, and wore monograms of pearls, and picture hats completed their costumes. Eva Bilsky, sister of the bride, was flower girl in white, carrying pink and white roses. Mrs. M. Bilsky, mother of the bride, wore black crepe de Chine and diamonds. The groom was attended by Alex Bilsky and Samuel Bilsky, brothers of the bride, and by A. Rosenthal, of New York. Among the guests were: Mrs. D. S. Friedman and the Misses Kellert, of Montreal; Mrs. M. Silver, of Merrickville. Major S. M. Rodgers was toastmaster. The gift of the bride's parents was the furniture of the house on Daly Avenue, her new home. The bride's brothers gave her a piano and a five o'clock tea set and the groom's parents gave a cabinet of sterling silver. Going away to the western States, the bride wore a tailor-made gown of dark gray cloth.

Miss Betty Silver, Toronto, visited Dr. and Mrs. C. Moses, Mountain View Apartments.

Miss Rose Halpern entertained for Miss Ray Lewis, a June bride, at a bridge and linen shower, Sunday. Prize-winners: Mesdames Rose Levy, R. Levy, H. Lewis, I. Halpern and Miss Hilda Goldblatt. Mrs. H. Lewis and Miss Ann Friedman were guests from Toronto.

Mr. and Mrs. I. Rothbart, Toronto, were in the city Friday, guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Mann.

"We decreed a holiday"

When we inaugurated our super-speed 24-hour family wash service we virtually presented each Toronto housewife with one extra day each week, because that is just what it amounts to. Our return was immediate in the shape of such an increased volume of business that we were compelled to double the size of our premises. In addition to super-speed we have other services — all for family wash — one of which must surely meet your household requirements and also your household budget limitations. We'd be glad to explain. Phone to-day.

Separate Schools in Montreal and Elsewhere

By M. FRANK

In Montreal, Louis Fitch ran for the Provincial Legislature against Peter Bercovitch and was defeated by a narrow margin. Stripped of all non-essentials, personalities and tactical blunders on both sides, the main thing that matters is that there was a vital Jewish issue involved in the campaign. The issue was the Separate Schools, and Mr. Fitch, who championed the right of the Jews to establish separate schools for themselves, was given a surprisingly large support by the Jewish electorate. Whoever witnessed the school controversy in Montreal, at its inception, when there seemed to be hardly more than a dozen Jews who really wanted separate schools, could hardly believe that out of 3,300 votes cast, 1,500 Jewish votes would be cast in favour of separate schools. The very same "down-town Jews" whose nationalist proclivities the "up-towners" so much dread, were all but ready to lynch Mr. Fitch and his associates. It is gratifying to record that the Jews have learned something in the past three years.

One cannot get away from it. The division between nationalism and assimilation, which is an integral feature of European Jewish life, is taking definite shape in American Jewry. Peculiar conditions obtaining in Montreal with regard to the status of Jewish children may have accentuated the problem and, perhaps brought about the struggle somewhat prematurely, but essentially the issue goes far beyond the Montreal school problem. It is not unnatural that the struggle between the nationalists and the assimilationalists should break out around the school problem. For education is the most vital spot of any spiritual and cultural movement, and has long been in European Jewish life the pivot of most partisan struggles. Also in America, as the desire for cultural self-preservation has been growing, so there has been an increasing interest in Jewish education of which the logical conclusion is the establishment of parochial schools. The constitutional or practical aspect of the problem is different in New York than it is in Montreal. In New York or elsewhere in America outside of the Province of Quebec, the establishment of parochial schools is dependent upon voluntary organizations and is not connected with any state politics. There is therefore no occasion there for the school problem becoming a political issue. In the Province of Quebec however, this is inevitable. In New York, when a group of Jews establishes a parochial school, they do not thereby seek to impose a system of parochial schools upon the whole Jewish population of New York and all the opponents can do is make wry faces—which they do.

To put the matter squarely, it is this. If you are interested in the perpetuation of Judaism in the country where you live you must devise an educational system which best answers your views on Judaism or which comes fairly reasonably near it. The best way to insure a good education for a Jewish child is to have both his worldly and his Jewish education combined. It will not only give the child a better Jewish education than he would otherwise receive, but it will also make his schooling more convenient for him and give him more time for outdoor play. From the educational standpoint, then, separate or parochial schools are the only logical conclusion of a point of view which seeks to perpetuate Judaism.

But, as usually happens, between the point of view and the logical conclusion there are obstacles. To some, these obstacles seem too trivial as compared with the aim in view, to others they are sufficient to prevent them from going the full length. There are, to be sure, ever so many serious-minded Jews who are whole-heartedly interested in Jewish education and who are opposed to the establishment of separate schools in Montreal or of parochial schools elsewhere. There are, indeed, weighty objections to the establishment of separate schools. These objections are of a financial, practical, social, political character, but there are no serious objections on educational grounds. The latter are the product of the panicky imaginations of the opponents to separate schools in Montreal. The objections to separate schools become least weighty when applied to conditions in Montreal. Many Jews, therefore, who would oppose the establishment of separate schools elsewhere, are in favour of having them in the Province of Quebec. There the question is plain human dignity—not merely of nationalism or assimilation.

But what of New York or Toronto or Winnipeg? We cannot, within the time of this generation, conceive of a country-wide system of separate schools, but we ought to institute gradually a combined system of education in our leading Hebrew schools, at least up to a certain grade. This would especially be feasible in the case of the children who start at a Hebrew kindergarten. This has been done in some Hebrew schools on the continent and the growing sentiment in favour of such an arrangement would tend to point to the success of the experiments.

Itzikil

By MAX ROBIN

Night falls over the small town in Ukraine. The cattle have come home from the pasture. Their hungry cries, as they pass through the streets, tails swinging, have long died out. It is still.

A calm delight gently embraces the souls of those who, their day's work finished, can now afford to sit with a neighbour on a balcony, hidden away among trees in peaceful chat over a glass of tea.

Children are home, having played the long summer day, played barefoot somewhere far away, till they had grown tired; so tired, that sleep comes and overtakes them, like a dream, sweet, strong, untroubled, the caressing, never-to be-forgotten dream of fatigued, sun-heated, open-air childhood.

The day is at an end over the enclosed little town in Ukraine. The air turns blue, then gray, till, merging with the woods that evenly border the horizon it encircles, and quietly, quietly gathers in on the enchanted place.

Only in the sky there is still some light left, a silvery, milky light, and in that dreamy sky there is but one little cloud sailing, a golden little cloud sailing slowly, imperceptibly sailing somewhere.

Where is that little lonely cloud sailing? One would like to follow it, sit on its fluffy top, as in a feathery bed, and go along, go along a whole night and meet starts on the way, many big burning stars, with the earth black, terrible, mysterious beneath.

The little cloud has vanished, leaving a faint mark, a golden spirit in its wake. It is evening; not yet full evening, but the time of day when the light is gone and darkness is not yet. Mellow shades settle in the air.

At the river a late bather is taking his last dip. Ah, how delicious! Hard to leave at such an hour. And while he sits and dresses in the crushed grass, he hears a dull, even splash. It is the water falling from the mill far there in the hidden twilight. Sha-a—it goes, eternally, without stop, till one, losing himself in it, ceases hearing, ceases understanding.

One sits and listens to that awe-inspiring sha-a-a, becomes part of the profound, clear silence, the smell of grass and water, the music of insects chirping from the meadows stretching out beyond. A frog nearby has leaped into the water. . . .

There in the murky distance, a light has sprung up of a sudden. It blazes, flickers, beckons for pity from its dreary solitude.

The town is lighting up too. The way is leading through a narrow path in the meadow, with the swaying grass brushing against a washed, sensitive cheek, producing a sensation over the body that makes one want to hurry. One is alone.

Yet one, though afraid, hesitates before coming out. One is a shadow, puny, devoid of life and significance; a shadow, immobile, watchful, hesitant.

What peace, what tenderness, what tremulous, throbbing joy! A wind starts, blows; the first fresh evening breeze, mild, delicious, soothing.

Night falls over the small town in Ukraine. The cattle have gone home. It is still, still. . . .

In a loft, in a neat house, there is the figure of a young man bent in sacred study. He studies, murmurs softly, sings; then he raises up his head and thinks. There is a divine look in his eyes, an inscrutable expression on his face, as he gazes in fervent hope, in inspired belief, the subtle purity of his soul mirorred in that smiling, trustful gaze.

The youth is happy. He is learning. But he is with his God, God Whom he loves, to Whom he was born, to Whom he has given himself in silent, peaceful, invisible communion. He feels secure. And he is happy.

Itzikil went mad from too much study, from too much faith perhaps, from living too much apart from men. So it was said by those who had known Itzikil in his home town when he was young.

He was then a quiet boy, so quiet and retired that he seldom ventured out to the street and had no companions among the neighborhood boys. Upon the girls he had never cast an eye.

He was in more than one way peculiar. There was no need in him for play or laughter. He would hardly be heard as he went about; and home he asked no questions, seemed never to be vexed by any. Thoughts, strange thoughts they must have been, which no one could possibly think or answer, occupied his obscure mind.

His parents, intelligent, enlightened people, early recognized in him the exceptional, delicate child, of whom neighbours were greatly envious. They decided to educate him in private, expecting much of this wonder of God. He would be a learner; and then—who knows—what then?

No efforts were spared to advance the special tutoring of the boy. The Auerbachs were of considerable means. Let the other sons go into business. But this one—God forbid! They guarded Itzikil zealously, as one guards the apple of the eye.

Itzikil was not concerned about this—seemed never to be concerned about anything earthly. A white little boy, curly-haired, handsome, he was wholly given over to learning. It was a passion in him from the start, an uncontrollable hunger, an urge, that could only have been inspired by the One Who lives forever.

He was educated at home, where the best teachers came to him. He would be their pride and fame. Such a golden head! Truly the boy was a genius, a genius whose like it would be hard to find.

He belonged to his books; lived in them, amorously, not alone with his soul, but even with his body. He had no other craving; all of him went into those soiled black lines, turned yellowish, golden; lines rich with meannig, of an all-surviving wisdom and beauty that has not to this day been surpassed.

It was not with his mind that Itzikil devoted himself to his learning. His mind perhaps grasped little of what he was doing; it was with his spirit rather that he understood and absorbed it all.

And he absorbed his sacred learning greedily, with an unquenchable, wholesome delight, like the earth, ready, receptive, absorbing every drop of rain that falls to it from the sky. Itzikil was happy, completely, forgetfully happy, studying.

At first he had a room in which, closeted alone during the day, he sat steeped in holy contemplation, or else he would murmur sweetly and sing. And his voice, like a warbling, filtering out of the room, would enthral whomsoever happened to be present; for is there a music that lends itself more subtly to the ear than that which issues, fresh and subdued, from a heart still young and pure, palpitating gently in its first ardor of faith?

That room of Itzikil was regarded as a sanctuary by the entire household. No one would go into it even when its inmate was out. It was Itzikil's chamber. They would walk on their toes, whisper in conversation.

"Sh. . . Itzikil is learning. . ."

And the mother with halted breath, would stand and listen to her boy chanting; and such joy was there at her heart that she would let tears fall, tears of gratitude for the great blessing which God had bestowed upon her house, so unworthy of it.

When Itzikil, the white, the treasurable, would appear, the mother, in her quiet modesty and pride, would feel herself in the presence of some one holy, and she would be afraid to think of that one as her son. A true wonder of God was this clean boy in the little round black cap and long shining cloak that reached down to his ankles.

A holy being he was, in his absolute innocence and devotion, protecting the house, its inmates imbued with a sense of spiritual and even physical security.

In time it became apparent that his advancing studies and years, together with the maturing contemplation which they entailed, necessitated for Itzikil a more strictly secluded solitude.

High over the Auerbach house was a loft—a clean, unfrequented place—which by day received its light from a picturesque dormer window at the top and by night was illuminated by a lamp suspended conveniently from a beam in the roof. In summer the rain could be heard pattering overhead, and during a storm the thunder would roll and reverberate long over the place. But Itzikil, firm in his belief in God, was afraid of neither storm nor thunder; for was He not Master and Creator of all things?

So up to this loft Itzikil moved. And there he found he could indeed better devote himself, devote himself with an undisturbed resignation, to the poetry, the sacred charm and wisdom of his books, his only companions there as elsewhere, save that great God Who was with him, in him, ever and forever about him.

No noise could reach the youthful scholar in his new abode. It was seldom that he had to come down, and no one would come to him in his peaceful sanctuary. Itzikil, while learning, singing sweetly, could not be disturbed.

He ate little, felt much. His days were filled with tenderness. The light the air, the enfolding twilight—it was all from heaven, like a midsummer dream, over which the heart swells big, and there is not one thing that one does not embrace and love.

He saw beautiful images, wondrous visions, the kind no plain man is ever given to behold. Men came to him, smiling; they were no doubt angels in disguise, coming and smiling and waving to him in friendly approbation. Let them smile. They were sent hither by God. Let their mission remain unrevealed. Itzikil was content, happy.

He felt the sacredness of his life, a life detached from the ordinary life lifted above it, nearer, ever nearer to his God.

Hours between study the growing youth would indulge in reverie. Solemn those hours would be, when Itzikil would lose himself, musing, till he no longer remembered where he was.

But always, always the thought asserted itself in his smiling, exuberant consciousness that God, his great Almighty God, was with him, constantly with him, and to such a God it was good—besides imperative—to belong, with every drop of blood, with the soul, with the mind and body. Blessed be His holy name.

When Itzikil emerged finally and came into the house, what but a saint shaped in the lofty image of that God could he be! He would emerge purified, somewhat hidden from all and above him. He would show himself ever more purified and ennobled.

And he would bring with him into the house a holy atmosphere. But he would remain alone. No one existed for him. He would see no one. He would move about little, and when walking, his tread would be noiseless, soft. He smiled, and it was evident that he knew nothing of what was taking place about him.

Something, it was said, had snapped in the genius.

"It was really above the measure. So much to take upon oneself!"

Yes, so much to take upon oneself!

Itzikil, Itzikil, why have you overstrained yourself? In your fervent, all-consuming devotion, why have you denied yourself the freedom and intercourse, the joys and sorrows, of ordinary mortals. Why was there not one to guide and restrain you, Itzikil, Itzikil, in its misguided faith, your soul has burned itself over, and what has become of you, Itzikil? . . .

Itzikil had lost his mind. Such a subtle, bright mind to lose! A light that might have burned, blown out. A sparkling, budding intelligence overwrought, destroyed.

And how did it happen—how?

It happened imperceptibly, when, little by little, the passion and ardor of the young man, unexpressed and unapplied, was irretrievably exhausting itself, steadily growing stale. His senses, ever so sensitive and responsive, were becoming dull, numb, beclouded.

Nevertheless Itzikil endeavoured to keep up. He would cling to this life into which he was born, his life, the only one known to him. He felt that without it he must perish.

But his efforts were like the efforts of a man who had lost his blood, dogged, determined, but doomed to avail nothing in the end.

He now studied merely for the sake of studying, with the delicious thrill which the joyous acquisition of spiritual ascendance yields one, no longer known to him. He studied, feeling that he must study, to progress, to cover more and more ground every day. While inside of him was a dryness, a barrenness, a widening, insoluble void.

This necessity of studying, its purpose no longer illumined by the inspiration of the soul, was developing into an obsession. He would persist. . .

Why, why, O God, dost Thou forever punish those who by their acts have proven themselves most faithful to Thee?

During all this time Itzikil was still being left alone, revered, as formerly by all the change in him remaining unobserved. Alone, he was now rapidly becoming more estranged from people. When he showed himself his eyes were big, bewildered. On being spoken to, he smiled, blushed; sometimes he grew so scared as to lose himself entirely, and then he would be unable to answer altogether. He would burst into sudden laughter. And in alarm it was at last remarked that Itzikil had begun to acquire strange characteristics. He would keep turning his head and look around furtively at the table.

No one knew of the weird hallucinations that visited the scholar in his silent retreat, of the images that kept him company there. He would carry on long conversations with them. And his eyes, the once calm, clear, divine eyes, mirroring a heavenly-groping soul, had taken on a curious, wild, amused expression.

Amused. Everything seemed funny to Itzikil. He would be irresistibly impelled to laugh, to chuckle, to be happy and gay, always, always.

Still they might have continued to leave Itzikil undisturbed, if at this time and in this condition, he had not attained his military age.

Ordinarily, the Auerbachs, as in the case with their other sons, would have found a way to keep Itzikil out of "Christian hands," out of the army; either by buying him out, or by arranging for another to go in his place.

That year, however, owing to previous extravagances and the resultant charges against officials, an unusual strictness was observed; and it fell out that his son was, in spite of the critical state of his mind, declared fit for service in the Christian army of the Czar.

He was not kept there long, and it could not later be said that the army had had much to do with Itzikil's insanity. But he came back an imbecile.

The street was ready for him, after the fruitless efforts of his kin to save him. And so there was another added to the bands of crazy men and women that roam the roads and towns of beautiful peaceful Ukraine.

Itzikil Chaikovker—such was the name given him.

He would run from town to town, vent, gay, smiling, and when some one stopped to ask him: "Where are you going, Itzikil?" his answer would be: "To Chaikovke" or "From Chaikovke." Hence the name "Chaikovker."

On the dusty road away from all, would sometimes a man, lonely, sometimes a woman in rags. There were not a few of these, the history of some as tragic and heartbreaking as Itzikil's. But as if by general agreement, out of a mutual understanding and sympathy perhaps, even if the rest of the world did not join with them in any such sentiments, these comrades-in-misfortune would always avoid one another, keeping well out of each other's way and trouble.

Itzikil would run jauntily over streets and roads, and everywhere he would be known and greeted. People gazed after him, not only from pity, but very often with fear at their hearts; for here surely, before their very eyes, was the fate of man and the power of God convincingly portrayed. A grim horror would possess the pious.

With time the high station which Itzikil had previously occupied was forgotten, and strangers ceased to respect him. He was soon confounded in a class with the other imbeciles and treated with an equal disdain.

Insanity, it would be seen, proved a release for the frustrated young genius. The physical and mental barriers of a lifetime were of a sudden lifted. Itzikil became a free man. He could do whatever he wanted—run, laugh, talk, be happy—all in the manner of other people. He made the most of his madness.

He would approach any one, and in a jovial air ask: "Will you give me a spanking?"

Some would refuse; others, even children whom he would accost frequently, would administer the spanking, and later feed the crazy man.

By his present behaviour it was impossible to associate the man with the life and habit ascribed to him in the past. But there stood out the delicate skin and white teeth of Itzikil, successfully withstanding the encroachments of his daily mystery.

He was always hungry; and without any one knowing why, he had taken to eating candles. Jews would refuse him candles, and he went to the Gentiles, peasants. Amused, they would gorge him generously with their lard and pork, deriving from this a certain gratification, for they well knew that as a Jew he was forbidden to eat their stuff; while to the crazy man the substitution of pork for candles proved only slightly offensive.

He would steal into a house at dinner-time and, no one watching, snatch away the dinner-plate from the table. He would flee through the town, with the coveted dish clasped firmly to his breast, the entire family following him armed with broomsticks and oven rakes, bent on catching him, not so much to recover their stolen meal, of which they would this day be deprived, but to punish the lunatic and prevent a similar occurrence in the future.

But for nothing in the world would the fugitive part with his treasure. He would rave. Didn't they understand? He was famished, and the savoury smell of the food had gone into his nose. He would rave madly, calling the whole town together.

In the rare lucid intervals which he enjoyed, Itzikil would remember and speak of his past, how he longed for the holiday-table, the Jewish holiday-table, with its purity and charm—as he had once known it. . .

Years went by. Itzikil lived and became almost a middle-aged man.

All along the way, in the adjoining villages and towns, Jews and Gentiles knew Itzikil Chaikovker.

One day in summer—it was harvest-time, when the warm fragrance of hay perfumes the air of Ukraine—some Christian youngsters, for want of something better to do, were sitting out near the road. Into view suddenly came Itzikil.

"Hey, fellows, let's have some fun with the Jew," proposed one of the idlers.

The others, indifferent, sat awaiting the insane man.

Itzikil ran by, bent, smiling, now mumbling, as was his habit.

Here were these fellows, so strong, so plain; while he—such a tortured, accursed and miserable creature.

"Hitzikel" one hailed him.

The crazy man, without heeding the

It must have provoked their ire, and one started after him in pursuit.

Itzikil, still unmindful, ran along, his pace unchanged.

Overtaking him, the fellow roughly seized his arm. He was not quite infuriated, but growing nervous. And it was in fear, himself, smiling, that he demanded: "Where are you going, Jew!"

The face of Itzikil continued to express his good nature. He did not know danger. Nor did he understand the speech of his assailant. And it was in his own tongue that he asked genially: "You want to spank me?"

The fellow began pulling him, against little resistance, toward his companions, who were already up and approaching, reluctantly, only half amused.

"Want to spank me?" he repeated to the company, inoffensively, laughingly.

There was no one around. They made sure of that. Still, for greater safety, they took Itzikil aside, away from the road.

"Make the Jew scream!" a voice suggested.

They twisted his arms, ears bent him double, punched him, but Itzikil would not scream.

"Shout!" they ordered.

The crazy man did not understand. He smiled.

A hayfork was found, and while some held him, others plunged the teeth into his feet, sides. Then Itzikil cried, loud, loud.

At this they felt satisfied, and were about to let him go, when it was heard:

"Say boys; let's make a fire and roast the Jew."

At first there came no response. But later, with a little urging, the rest could not resist, and they went, Itzikil, by far the oldest of them all, in their midst.

They entered a little wood. "Who will tie him?" None would tie him.

Finally, one braver than the others, volunteered. He took the still smiling Itzikil and posted him against a tree—a young tree. The fellow was trembling. And the rest of the company, while not lending a hand, vainly endeavoured to look amused.

They brought together some sticks and hay.

"Who has a match?"

By luck one had a match.

Approaching from behind, furtively amid the dead silence, a boy lighted the match.

Still Itzikil did not understand. Still Itzikil kept smiling.

The hay was dry. The sticks were like paper. The fire developed rapidly. And slowly, in alarm over what they had started and were now powerless to stop, the boys fell into retreat.

As the fire broke into flames, they began to run. And they were far, far, when, at last, shouts reached them, distant scattered shouts, that were without meaning.

"Ha! ha! ha!"

The despair of an insane man was in that voice. It filled the wood with terror in the middle of the day.

No one was near, and the boys were hiding, afraid to turn back and untie their victim.

It was long before those horrible shouts ceased.

And it was long before the body of Itzikil, not much burned, was found and brought to eternal rest in an Israelite grave.

Such was the end of Itzikil, who in his youth promised to be a genius. Nightfall over the small town in Ukraine. The cattle have gone home from pasture. It is still, still . . . .—Menorah Journal.

MEANING OF BAR-MITZVAH

From the Truro (N.S.) News: The editor of the News, being a reader of the exceedingly well-edited and well-printed weekly CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW of Toronto and constantly coming across the word bar-mitzvah, associated with some kind of ceremonial or festivity connected with Jewish boys, and with a mighty short course in Hebrew and a still shorter one in Theology, was completely at sea in regard to the meaning of the words "bar-mitzvah," so he referred this writing, in an unknown tongue, to the Rev. J. H. Anderson, B.D., of Onslow Station, the clever pastor of the Onslow-Belmont United Church, and Mr. Anderson has kindly furnished us with the following notes of "bar-mitzvah":

The name means "son of the Law" and has to do with the ceremony observed by the Jewish home and community when a boy attains the age of thirteen (modern times) and assumes a new relationship to the "Law" and new responsibilities in the religious life of the community.

In the ancient Jewish home, boys, until their fifth year, were under the charge of the women, afterwards they passed under the father's control. No doubt many mothers retained their influence after the boy's childhood, e.g., Eunice (and Lois) with Timothy.

The period of boyhood was from the fifth to the thirteenth year. The legal "coming of age" was at thirteen for boys but twelve or even earlier for girls. But one scholar, Schurer, thinks that the definite age was fixed in post-Talmudic times, and that nothing but "the signs of approaching puberty" settled in earlier times whether a child was bound or not bound to the observance of the Law. The Mishna says: "When a child is twelve years and one day old his oaths are tested; when he is thirteen years and a day, they are valid without further ceremony."

At twelve or thirteen the Jewish became bound to fulfil the Law. He was therefore called a "son of the Law" (bar-mitzvah) or a "son of the Precept," and the ceremony in which he was recognized as such by the community was naturally regarded as important and interesting. Opinions differ as to how much of the Law a boy was bound to observe before this ceremony. Probably there was no uniformity. Probably also the exact [illegible] the fullest obligation fell on the [illegible] not fixed at first, but was [illegible] individually by the appearance of signs of approaching manhood. We must remember that Orientals attain physical maturity at an earlier age than we do.

According to the modern rule, the boy must be thirteen years old and a day. He is then presented in the synagogue on a Sabbath, called the "Sabbath of the Phylacteries," because the boy is then invested with them, and wears them in prayer, and is bound to observe feasts and fasts. In olden days the obligation to attend the feasts at Jerusalem perhaps became binding after this ceremony. Women and children were exempt by the law—"Three times a year shall all thy males appear before the Lord thy God in the place where He shall choose . . ." (Deut. 16:16). In modern times the Jewish boy reads (or rather sings) the lesson, and gives the blessing for the first time at the bar mitzvah ceremony in the presence of his relatives and the congregation. It is to his parents a time of joy and honour, and as he intones the holy words, the prayers of his pious friends are offered. The presiding rabbi usually gives an address garnished with personal allusions. Presents to the boy from his friends, and a feast at the parents' house follow the ceremony.

Editor,
CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW—

Herewith I wish to rectify a grave error Rabbi Isserman made in the Shabuoth editorial of the last issue of your paper. He contends there that only two synagogues in Canada have confirmation services in connection with Shabuoth. He presumably means—as always when speaking of liberal congregations in Canada—Holy Blossom, of Toronto, and Temple Emanu-El of Montreal. May I tell Rabbi Isserman that the Anshe Sholom Congregation of Hamilton has had confirmation services on Shabuoth for more than 55 years.

I grasp the opportunity to correct another mistake Rabbi Isserman made in his editorial written several months ago, on the occasion of the seventieth anniversary of the Holy Blossom Congregation of Toronto. He said there that his congregation is the oldest in Ontario. I wish to state that the Anshe Sholom Congregation of this city was founded 76 years ago, and that in its first by-laws it is expressedly said that all services have to be conducted in a liberal and progressive manner, in accordance with the spirit of our age.

Asking you to give space for these lines in the next issue of the REVIEW, I am, sincerely,

DR. ARTHUR A. FRIEDMAN,
Rabbi.

CONFERENCE TO STRENGTHEN RELIGION IN PALESTINE

A conference of rabbis and of leaders in the orthodox Jewish community was recently held in Jerusalem, with a view of devising ways of strengthening Jewish religious life in Palestine. Rabbis Kook, Sonnenfeld and Aaronson took part in the discussions and a number of resolutions were adopted. Among these are resolutions which provide for the establishment of committees to watch over the observance of the Sabbath in the towns and villages, to issue a prohibition against football matches on the Sabbath, the submission of a demand to the Government that Jewish officials should be released from work on the Sabbath, the submission of a demand to the Zionist Executive, the Keren Hayesod, the Jewish National Fund and American Jewry that they adopt strong measures against the violation of the Sabbath in Palestine. The conference also resolved that it was the duty of all Jews to employ Jewish labour and to use the products of the land.

Conclusion?

many Jews [illegible] affected in the [illegible] more of the [illegible] conclusion.

The question of Jewish schools in Quebec is of this sort. It has been a moot subject for many years, and will be for many years to come. As we see it, even if Jewish separate schools are achieved in Montreal, it will not be because that consummation is a logical consequence of a thorough-going conception of Jewish nationalism. We dare say that even Mr. Fitch and Mr. Garber, the champions of separate schools, will not advocate separate schools in Toronto where conditions are not propitious. Their advocacy of separate schools is a result of the special conditions which obtain in Montreal. The establishment of separate schools in Montreal will be brought about not by the pressure of Jewish nationalistic logic from within, but by the pressure of conditions from without. Mr. Bercovitch may not be a consistent nationalist. But he will be obliged to agree to separate schools if conditions will leave no alternative. Thus the realization of the desideratum of separate schools is contingent upon other factors than that of Jewish nationalism. As a matter of common sense, it will be impossible to effectuate the ideal of separate schools until the realities of the situation will compel unanimity among the Jews.

Now, Fitch professed to make the matter of Jewish separate schools an issue in his campaign. We agree that it was perfectly proper for him to make this Jewish subject an issue in a division which is predominantly Jewish. After all, the Jews as citizens have a right to demand from the state an education for their children. In Quebec the term "public education," is of necessity conditioned by the religion of the recipients. When you talk of schools you talk of "Protestant schools" or "Catholic schools." Where the term "Protestant" and "Catholic" are stressed, Jews have a right to have the term "Jewish" stressed in so far as it applies to themselves.

We say, then, that Fitch might have been justified in making the issue of schools—important as it generally is, and pressing as it now is—an issue in his division among the Jews. If he had come out as a Jewish candidate without strings, championing this important cause, he would have been deserving of the support of all Jews, and consistently so with the best principles of Canadian politics.

But Fitch was not prepared to stand or fall by the platform of Jewish schools. He had not the courage to appear as the out-and-out Jewish candidate, fighting for an ideal, and prepared to lose for an ideal. If Fitch had really cared for the ideal of separate schools and fought for it, pure and unadulterated, he could have commanded the votes of all Jews, regardless of their ordinary political affiliations. Obtaining the united support of all nationalist Jews—and the vast majority are nationalistic—Fitch would have been able to show the powers that be what Jewish opinion really was. Whether he would have won or lost—because of the French vote, and other extraneous circumstances—he could have created a united Jewish opinion and attitude. And politicians reckon with a united attitude.

Fitch, however, did not run as a special candidate, fighting in a special emergency, for a cause which vitally concerned the majority of his constituents in the exercise of their usual prerogatives as citizens. He chose to run as a Conservative candidate bearing the official endorsation of the party.

Fitch is a realist in politics. He takes his political connections seriously. He was until very recently a Liberal. If he had not taken his political affiliations seriously he would not have gone to the trouble of making a change.

In entering this campaign, Fitch did not want to sacrifice his political affiliation for the sake of his favorite ideal of separate schools. It is known that as far as [illegible] parties were concerned neither took any special stand in the subject of Jewish separate schools. Fitch ran as a Conservative, because, for his own reasons, he chose to be a Conservative.

We ask, therefore, what right did Fitch have to expect Jewish voters of other parties to forego their own political affiliations and vote for him, as a Conservative? Fitch himself was anxious to retain and exploit his own party affiliations. Why should Jews who, for one reason or another, are members of the Liberal party, or Labour party, renounce the benefits or the principles involved in their allegiance to other parties and further his political prestige with his own party?

Fitch took his Conservatism seriously enough not to discard it even for one campaign. Why should the Jewish members of the Labour party risk their standing with the Labour party for his sake? A leader must never ask his followers to give more than he gives himself.

We know the ways of politicians. We make allowances for their tactics and methods. But we do not want them to think that they can really fool the public and get away with it. Especially so when they seek to make capital of ideals that deserve reverent treatment.

Fitch went further in his political opportunism: In his published platform he declared himself ready to renounce his own views on the issue of separate schools, and oppose the latter, if the public wanted it so. He was not fighting for separate schools. He did not care (on his own admission) what happened to the cause. He was not going to lead. He was ready to follow. Leadership implies sacrifice if the cause is unpopular. Fitch was prepared to sacrifice the ideal. He acted like the false mother before Solomon.

Fitch committed further indelicacies (a mild term!) against Jewish nationalism by dragging in the revered name of Weizmann into his campaign. In his campaigning literature he attributed to Weizmann the endorsation of himself as a leader in Israel. Moreover, he continued to stress the fact that he was a vice-president of the Canadian Zionist Organization. Now Weizmann and the Zionist Organization have plenty of troubles of their own without being made to serve as tools in a political campaign. A loyal vice-president of the organization, serving a lofty ideal would rather suffer himself for the sake of the ideal than make the ideal suffer for his sake.

We have made this survey of the facts and circumstances and motives not because we harbour any animus against the defeated candidate or his party. We are not concerned with politics. Our object was to present the situation in its realistic perspective. We do not expect politicians to conduct campaigns, especially in Montreal, in accordance with the higher principles of ethics. But we expect them to preserve a certain degree of respect for principles and ideals which a people cherishes and reverences. Sacred ideals should be handled by clean hands. The campaign in Montreal was an ordinary political campaign. A clever political manipulator sought to make political capital out of the issue of Jewish separate schools, out of Jewish Nationalism and out of Zionism. The result of the election proves nothing. But we want an enlightedned public opinion to warn policitians away from such practices in the future.—A.B.B.

ST. CATHARINES

The last meeting of the season of Hadassah Chapter was held at a dinner at the Welland Hotel. Covers were laid for twenty-nine. The table was decorated with sweet peas. The members drove to the Synagogue Club rooms, where the guests of honour, Mrs. A. Selick and Mrs. D. Dunkleman, spoke. A vote of thanks was given them by the Hebrew teacher, Mr. Kootnick.

Mr. and Mrs. Schenkman were guests of Mrs. Starr over the week-end.

lessens the risk of Baby's Second Summer

MORE intelligent use of ice has done more than any other one thing to reduce infant mortality during the dangerous summer months.

The fateful second summer is no longer the worry to mothers that it once was. They have learned that the simple precaution of protecting Baby's food with steady and plentiful use of ice is "the quard of prevention."

Milk must be kept ice-cold all of the time, not part of the time. That prevents bacteria from developing and making the milk unfit for Baby's use.

For a few cents a day you can keep Baby's milk constantly fresh and pure with ice. Remember also that a nickel's worth of ice will save a dollar's worth of food, for the whole family.

NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water, power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

CHAIN STORE SECURITIES

Recent developments in a Canadian chain store system, now operating shops in various Canadian cities throughout the Dominion, with head offices and factory in Montreal, are expected to lead shortly to an announcement of a new issue of preferred and common stock for public offering.

Proceeds of the issue will be used for the opening of new stores in other cities and the addition of other stores in cities where the company is already operating, and additional factory facilities.

A development along the lines here outlined has been in view for some time and the public announcement of the issue will probably be made within the next month.

The firm in question has made rapid strides during the past few years and has now reached a position where it feels it can profitably make a material extension of its retailing facilities. It operates the only trans-Canadian chain of shops dealing exclusively in lingerie and hosiery, and possibly the only chain of its kind on this continent.

MONTREAL ISLAND POWER $8,000,000 BOND ISSUE QUICKLY OVERSUBSCRIBED

Nesbitt, Thomson & Co., Limited, announce that the $8,000,000 bond issue of Montreal Island Power Company, Limited, has been largely oversubscribed and that an unusually wide distribution has been effected.

This is a 5½ per cent. thirty-year first mortgage security and represents one of few issues of its kind on a Montreal Island hydro development offered in some time. The fact that the company has contracted with Montreal Power Consolidated to purchase the power to be produced at present and in the future at this site added to the interest in the issue and its immediate success reflects the popularity of this class of investment.

Interesting features of the work, which will be proceeded with at an early date and provide a large amount of employment, are that the engineering and construction will be under the direction of the engineering department of the Power Corporation of Canada, Limited, while the plant, when completed, will be under the direction of Montreal Power Consolidated.

The site is on the Rivière des Prairies (Back River), about seven miles from the centre of Montreal, and it is expected that 40,000 h.p. will be ready by the end of 1929. The ultimate capacity is placed at 65,000 h.p.

The company has a strong board of directors, largely composed of men experienced in the hydro-electric business through Montreal Power and Power Corporation of Canada, Limited.

At Boston, Mass., June 4, Ben John Ortenberg died, aged 3 years and 4 months, son of Dr. and Mrs. S. Ortenberg.

Albert Michael, 13-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Michael, Sherbrooke Street West, died Friday, May 27. He was a cadet and boy scout and was to be confirmed at Temple Emanu-El this year. He leaves one brother, Leonard.

A. S. Solomon, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Solomon, died May 31 at Mount Sinai Hospital, New York, at the age of thirty. Burial took place Thursday, June 2, from the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Solomon, 5369 Park Avenue. He is survived by his parents, three brothers, Max, Meyer and Bernard; and three sisters, Clare and Sadie Solomon and Mrs. Fanny Kiermeyer. He was a graduate of Montreal High School and received the degree of B.C.L. from the Faculty of Law, of McGill University. He was admitted to the bar, January, 1926, but was unable to practice on account of illness. He was past chancellor Commander of the Knights of Pythias, Ivanhoe Lodge, and was also a member of the Hilary Club.

WOMAN INJURED BY AUTO

Mrs. Elia Shaar, aged twenty-seven, of 1244 Cadieux Street, suffered a broken right leg and fractured ribs when she was struck down by a "hit-and-run autoist" on St. Denis Street at Dorchester Street, at 6.35 o'clock, Tuesday, May 31. She was crossing the street when the auto, which was northbound, knocked her down and passed up the hill without stopping. She was taken to the Montreal General Hospital, while police of the City Hall Avenue station searched for the motorist. Her condition is favourable.

KILLED BY CAR

Mrs. Wolfe Pressman, aged forty-eight, of 176 Centre Street, was instantly killed at 2.45 o'clock, Sunday, May 29, when she was struck by a Cartierville tram car at Namur station, while returning with her husband from a meeting in the Jewish cemetery. She was the mother of seven children. While in Europe, during the war, she experienced terrible misfortune.

The car hit her as she hurried across the track, hurled her a few feet into the ditch, and she died from a fractured skull. Pressman narrowly missed a similar fate.

Pressman, who is a candy store owner, and his wife had been members of a gathering called to commemorate a religious event, in the ceremony. They intended to spend the remainder of the afternoon at Belmont Park, after the meeting dispersed, and with two friends awaited the approach of a car at the Namur stop.

In order to board the tram for Belmont Park it was necessary to cross to the other side of the tracks. Mrs. Pressman saw the car approaching when it was about 300 feet away, and taking her husband by the arm she moved forward. The "trailer," rapidly nearing the station, was soon upon them.

Mrs. Pressman was struck by the front of the conveyance just as her foot was leaving the rails and her husband was so close to the car that it almost brushed him.

Motorman Belanger immediately stopped the car and went to the victim's assistance, but it was too late.

Rabbi Isserman's Editorial

We at times regarded with scorn the pioneers who spent two weeks in travelling from New York to Washington. We thought we were indeed most advanced when we contrasted our ten-day journey across the Atlantic with the ten-week journey of a previous age. Our children will rise up and make the trans-Atlantic journey in ten hours, and remark on the backward generation which preceded them.

We had thought that the age of adventure was over. The Magellans, Cabots and Columbuses seemed like heroes of a far-away age, whose exploits could never be equalled. But we have now our Lindberghs and Chamberlains and Cobhams, whose daring and audacity have made us feel that the days of glorious adventure are not yet over and perhaps will never be over.

Mrs. D. Kling entertained at bridge Thursday afternoon in honour of her guest, Miss Ida Shalinsky, of Montreal, assisted by Mrs. S. Zacks and Miss Edythe King.

Miss Lilyan Stuchen gave a bridge Friday afternoon for Miss Ida Shalinsky, of Montreal. She was assisted by Misses Lillian Lipman and Sally Yampolsky.

Miss Sally Yampolsky has returned from Toronto, where she was the guest of Mrs. N. Gollom.

REPORT ON RUSSIAN COLONIZATION

A report covering the period from October, 1925, to January, 1927, has been issued by the Soviet Government Commission for Jewish Land Settlement in Russia, known as the "Comzet." The report says that during that period 44,044 hectares of land were allocated in Northern Crimea for the settlement of 1,260 Jewish families. In addition, 20,296 hectares were consolidated for the use of 638 families who settled in these regions before the State started the allocation of land to Jews in Crimea.

The Soviet Government assigned one million rubles in 1926 for the work of the Comzet, of which 454,000 rubles were spent in the Ukrainian colonies, 120,000 rubles in White Russia and smaller sums in other districts; 325,000 rubles were spent on building materials and 70,000 rubles for agricultural machinery.

The Jewish Communist Party is greatly agitated over the recent law regarding elections, and the manner of its application by the authorities, by which, it is claimed, almost 40 per cent. of the Jewish population had a representation of 3.8 per cent. of the entire assemblage.

A Federation of Conservative Jews of Germany was recently established at a meeting in Berlin. Delegates from various parts of the country were present and were welcomed by Mr. Moritz Loeb, who presided.

The Danish National Library of Copenhagen will receive one-half of the library of the late Georg Brandes, while the other half, consisting of about 10,000 volumes, will soon be sold at auction.
